Minimising and managing workplace stress

An introduction to using this resource

This resource is designed to support understanding around workplace stress, including how work impacts stress, how stress impacts individuals and what works to minimise and manage stress. Because stress is triggered by both what is happening around us and by our own personal experiences, this resource helps you explore what organisations can do to minimise and help manage stress, as well as what individuals can do.

The Minimising and Managing Workplace Stress Resource:

- Focuses on the impact of stress on mental wellbeing
- Supports more proactive conversations about how workplaces, teams and individuals can work with each other to:
 - Keep people safe from the harmful effects of stress
 - Support those experiencing harmful stress
 - Strengthen coping and resiliency to the stress we all experience in our lives
- Can be used alone or as an additional resource to support the with the Working Well suite of resources

It focuses on minimising and managing stress through three main strategies – the Three Rs:

Refuel Whakatipu

Looking after wellbeing and cultivating energy to refuel.

Resolve Whakatika

Identifying stressors and finding solutions that help resolve the causes of stress.

Relax Whakatā

Switching on the relaxation response to restore and rest.

Supporting workplaces to:

Assess

What are (or could be) risks and what protective factors exist

Plan

What are the best options to minimise or eliminate risks

Do

(agreed plans) to take action and review effectivness

Fact sheets help understanding

Stress in the workplace

- Why workplaces should look at stress
- How work impacts stress & stress impacts work
- Ways to recognise stress at work

Understanding the stress response

- Recognising stress is a normal and healthy response
- Understanding how stress works and why it can be harmful
- Introducing how to reduce the harm bad stress can cause

Reducing the impact of stress

- Our personal and environmental resources affect how we respond to stress
- Learning how to refuel, resolve stress and relax allows you to take action

Worksheets help action

Refuel Whakatipu

Tank on empty?

Recognising stress

Refuelling the tank – fuel in, fuel out

Workplace fuel consumption

Identifying stressors and supports

Finding balance: Te Whare Tapa Whā

Helping identify areas to focus on – for individuals and workplaces

Resolve Whakatika

Identifying the challenges & practising balanced thinking

Defining the issue, finding solutions

Acceptance and change

Identifying alternative solutions

Working backwards to a solution

Problem solving activity

Relax Whakatā

Switching on the relaxation response

How the relaxation response works and simple activities to help

The Minimising and Managing Workplace Stress Resource is part of the Working Well suite and follows on from two resources which introduce core information about what mental health and wellbeing is and how workplaces can support good mental health and strengthen wellbeing.

Creating positive work environments – the what, why and how Enhancing mental wellbeing – Five Ways to Wellbeing at Work

We know that there will be people experiencing high levels of stress right now

The information in this resource is best used when you have fuel in your own tank. If you're running on empty it's harder to take in new information and respond well to stress in others.

The information is not designed to treat individuals who may be experiencing the extreme outcomes of chronic or traumatic stress (such as high anxiety, depression, Post Traumatic Stress Disorder or burnout). We hope that these resources can help create an environment that will prevent extreme stress and identify what supports are available to help.

If you are concerned about yourself

We recommend talking to someone you trust. This can be someone at work, or in your community, a person who can help guide you such as a kuia or kaumatua, mentor, or trusted friend. You can also get advice from a GP, or other health professional.

If you are concerned about someone else at work

You may find our Open Minds resources useful to help you to have conversations about what is going on for them. It can support you to have a conversation with someone who is experiencing mental distress.

Remember to consider the supports you have available through your workplace and in your community. We list some of these in Getting help and advice.